It was new business to B. He had never before wen a writ of execution, and his ideas of the process were quite original. It was a fine warm morning were qu, when the writ was put into his hands, with request that it should be immediately attended to. footed it, something over a mile, to the residence the delinquent, and commenced operations. The beginning was easy enough. He levied on the wathe sled, the harness, and even the horses in barn, without difficulty, they all remained stade barry, even the old brindle cow in the spacious hem-yard walked but a few steps, and allowed him pare his hand upon her. But old brindle had a mightly calf, of about three months, which seemed

His of blandest "bossy, hossy, bossy!" as he extended he right hand enticingly, was regarded with suspiin by the mischievous bovine. B. re-read the writ he could but put one construction on its meaning. h was a command to levy on all the goods and chatols &c., and it must be obeyed. Besides, he would not risk the chances of being laughed at, by the aher "officers," and mayhap losing custom, for being anable to levy on a calf; to give it up was not

For some time the Col. tried with the utmost suaier in modo, to induce the young brindle to stand ill "just long enough (to use his own words) for ne to lay this small paper on your back, and I won't burt you, you young scamp." It was no go; "boswas not to be fooled by the intruder's douceur

He at length sat down on the sled to rest, and master brindle came to a stand at the corner of the barn, with his haunches slightly protruding. Again B. crept noiselessly along by the barn, holding his breath lest the unwary calf should take the hint : when within a proper distance, he made a successful spring and caught

The authors of the false-hoods and slanders of the present campaign which have already been so completely and so triumphantly refuted, will not hesitate to resort to the same system again before the election is over. In 1844, it will be recollected that a statement was set on foot at the last hour of the camgaign, that Mr. Polk, the democratic candidate, had the negroes on his fairing branched the new world, that Mr. Wesche designed to devote his talents and active life to the promotion of the arts in this country.

Wesche designed to devote his talents and active life to the promotion of the arts in this country.

"In a late visit to Pottsville, I was much gratified to witness the public spirit and noble patriotism evinced by the citizens of that place and surrounding country, in erecting a beautiful cast iron monument to the memory of Henry Clay, which is now being reared on a beautiful and commanding is eminence, near the centre of the borough.

I made some inquiry of the persons who have charge of the matter, and learned that the design of the monument as drawn by F. Hewson, Esq., and adopted by the committee, is as follows.

Calumny was used as a favorite weapon of whig leaders. It was finally proved to be a falsehood, made out of the whole cloth, without a shadow of truth to rest upon. Since the present campaign has opened, we have had a number of deliberate and abandoned fabrications from the same prolific source; and it was owing entirely to the watchfulness and the determination of the democracy that these fabrications only 13,411, are voters.

The cultivation of New Orleans of the census, the total poulation of New Orleans was owing entirely to the watchfulness and the determination of the democracy that these fabrications only 13,411, are voters.
